PREFACE

In December, 1960, the Census Office issued an Advance Report of Volumes III and IV. In my preface to that volume, I mentioned that the Advance Report was based on a sample and that it was being issued in order to provide statistical data which otherwise would have taken considerable time to produce. It has now been possible to produce Volume III which is derived from the 100 per cent Census cards and therefore supersedes the Advance Report in respect of those tables which are given in both.

The present volume is somewhat unique not only in content but also in its form of presentation. In addition to statistics for the total population, a special set of tables is given in Part Two of the book in respect of persons of foreign origin divided into born in Ghana and born abroad. In view of the significant proportion of immigrants and their descendants, their impact on the demographic and social structure of the Ghana population might be of interest. It is hoped that the data given in this volume will provide some material for such a study.

In connection with the programming of the machine tabulation for this volume, I would like to thank the Canadian Government for providing the services of a machine programming expert from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Mr. G. Berthiaume, the machine programming adviser, was in Ghana for two months during which period he programmed all the tables for this volume. We are grateful to him and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for the services rendered.

The Census Office is ever ready and willing to offer advice and explanation to those who may be in need of such guidance.

INTRODUCTION

I. THE DATA IN THIS VOLUME

1.1 An Advance Report of Volumes III and IV was published in December 1962. It was based on a 10 per cent sample of main Census punch cards and it was intended to supply urgently certain basic data for planning and administration purposes on a national and regional level before the tabulation of the 100 per cent data could be carried out. The data in the Advance Report being a sample had, consequently, a restricted breakdown. The area breakdown was limited to regions and the latter occasionally by urban and rural or size of locality. Other characteristics, such as age, occupation, industry, etc. were given mainly in broad classes or selected groups.

1.2 The present volume is based on a 100 per cent tabulation of the main Census punch cards. It gives demographic data for each of the 69 local authorities existing at the time of the Census (20th March, 1960) as well as for regions and total country. The data relate to sex, age, school attendance and level of education.

1.3 The volume is divided into two parts. Part One gives the above mentioned data for the total population while Part Two presents similar information for persons of foreign origin classified by country of origin with a breakdown into born in Ghana and born abroad.

1.4 However the breakdowns by urban/rural and size of locality which were part of the Advance Report programme are given in this volume only for the Foreign Origin Population and not for the Total Population. It was considered that the respective data in the Advance Report would adequately serve the needs of planning and research both on the regional and national level. In addition, a special report on towns is being prepared concurrently with this volume. The Special Report on Towns will give similar data (to those produced in Volume III for the local authorities) for each of the 30 " large " towns with a population of 10,000 and over but less than 100,000, and for each of the three cities of Sekondi-Takoradi (3 towns), Accra (2 towns) and Kumasi (2 towns). The cities were, in addition, divided into 42 statistical areas (10, 17 and 15 respectively). Data relating to the characteristics of each individual town appear to be more useful for local planning and administration than aggregates for urban or rural localities.

1.5 Obviously Volume III supersedes the Advance Report only in those parts in which it replaces the provisional and sample data of the latter by similar data based on a 100 per cent tabulation. In other parts, e.g. with respect to data giving the urban/rural breakdown the Advance Report remains " valid " for all purposes. The user's attention is drawn to differences due to sampling variability. Only in a few cases are the slight differences between the Advance Report and Volume III a result of improvement in editing of the latter publication.

2. DEMOGRAPHIC CONCEPTS AND CLASSIFICATIONS AND LIMITATIONS OF THE DATA

2.1 GENERAL REMARKS: The concepts, definitions and classifications used in the Ghana Census were largely based on the international recommendations by the United Nations and its specialized agencies.[1] Departures from these recommendations were due to the need for adaptation to local conditions. These modifications are mentioned in the relevant parts of the explanations given below. Every endeavour was made to obtain complete information on the population. Enumerators were instructed on the methods to employ in cases where a person did not know the detail required or whenever a person could not be contacted. The general rule was that in no circumstances should a question have been left unanswered. The idea behind this instruction was the assumption that the likelihood of bias arising in an answer from an indirect source of information would be less than in a case of non-response.

In the few cases where enumerators failed to make the required entry special techniques were used during the processing of the Census information to "assign" the omitted information. A similar procedure was used in the case of inconsistent or ambiguous entries. Consequently, categories such as the "not stated" and the "ill-defined" do not appear in the Census tables.

2.2 POPULATION: The 1960 Population Census was a defacto count. Each person was enumerated at the place of stay on Census Night, 20th March, 1960. The same principle was applied to the population of the country as a whole. Foreign visitors present in Ghana on Census Night were included in, while Ghanaians who were abroad on that night were excluded from, the count (for details, see Volume I, Introduction, sec. 5.1).

2.3 REGION: At the time of the Census (March 20th, 1960) there were six regions in Ghana: Western, Eastern, Volta, Ashanti, Brong-Ahafo and Northern. The area around Accra City comprising Accra Municipal Council, Tema Development Corporation and Ga-Dangbe-Shai Local Council formed geographically and legally part of the Eastern Region. It was, however, administered separately by the Minister responsible for Local Government. This area was considered, for Census purposes, as a seventh region under the name of Accra Capital District (Accra C.D.).

[1] For references, see Volume II, Introduction, sec. 2.1, footnote 1.

A small map of Ghana (on the 1: 3,000,000 scale) showing these Census regions is bound in with this volume. For each individual region a separate and more detailed map (on the 1: 250,000 scale) is available in the map supplement (Plan of Enumeration Areas) which accompanies the Census Volume II.

The boundaries of the regions were established with the determination of the boundaries of the local authorities which legally formed part of the various regions. A comparison between the Administrative boundaries existing at the time of the 1948 Census and those existing at the time of the 1960 Census is made in the Introduction to Volume I. Briefly, however, the Gold Coast Colony as constituted in 1948 was covered by the Western Region, Accra Capital District, Eastern Region and the lower and central parts of Volta Region in 1960; Ashanti of 1948 corresponded broadly to the Ashanti and Brong-Ahafo Regions of 1960; while the Northern Territories of 1948 were covered by the Northern Region together with the upper part of the Volta Region in 1960.

2.4 LOCAL AUTHORITY: When the geographical preparations for the Census were commenced there were some 262 local authorities. Under various Local Government Instruments, mostly of July and October, 1959 and January, 1960, a new division of the country was effected, establishing an aggregate of sixty-nine local authorities. This was the total at the time of the Census and these are the local authorities for which Census data are published.

Of the sixty-nine local authorities, four had "municipal" status (Accra, Kumasi, Sekondi-Takoradi and Cape Coast), ten "urban" status (Agona Swedru, Nyakrom-Nkum, Tarkwa-Abosso, Nsawam, New Juaben, Oda-Swedru, Keta, Obuasi, Sunyani and Tamale) and one special status (Tema Development Corporation).

Local authorities are given code numbers arranged by region. The name and code number of each local authority is given on the map following this Introduction. In all Census publications the lists of regions and of local authorities within regions are arranged in serpentine order from south to north, commencing from south-west.

In all but a few cases the boundaries of both the former and the new local authorities were neither physically demarcated nor mapped. In the circumstances, geographical teams of the Census Office plotted them on the basis of information received from the local authorities. The method employed was to determine the local authority affiliation of settlements and then to insert boundaries between settlements belonging to different local authorities. Local knowledge was drawn upon wherever possible for a more precise indication of the nature of the boundary such as a stream or a footpath. Mapwork was usually conducted on the 1: 62,500 scale (approx. one inch to the mile) in the south of Ghana and on the 1:250,000 scale (approx. one quarter of an inch to the mile) in the north.

It should be emphasized that these boundaries were plotted for statistical purposes only. They do not convey any legal or administrative authority. In the absence of officially demarcated boundaries, however, the Census boundaries may be regarded as provisional local authority boundaries existing at the time of the Census.

Since the date of the Census a number of official changes relating to local authorities have been made, the last one being a new division into some 154 local authorities. This division in general affected the boundaries of local councils while the municipal councils and the large urban councils have retained the boundaries existing during the Census.

For reasons of uniformity and comparability the Census publications preserve the 69 local authorities as at 20th March, 1960.

2.5 AGE: Age is given in completed years as at Census date. Enumerators had instructions on how to estimate the ages of persons who did not know their ages. The following were the methods used in order of preference. (In certain cases two or more methods were combined to elicit the age of the respondent.)

a. A list of historical events with dates was given in the Enumerator's Manual. The enumerator had to choose an event which, in his estimation, occurred about the time when the respondent was born. Then, the respondent was asked whether he had heard about the given event and if he had, whether he could state how old he was at that time or, if he was born after the event, whether he ever heard how many years before his birth the said event occurred.

b. Field supervisors were instructed to prepare, in addition, a list of local events specific for each area with dates, so that these could be used in cases where the national or regional events would not assist.

c. When the two techniques mentioned above could not be used, the enumerator was expected to resort to family age relationships and other devices, such as: estimating the age of a grown-up woman by connecting it with the age of the oldest child if the latter's age could be more reliably assessed; or determining the age in relation to biological and physiological marks.

d. Only as a last resort should the enumerator have estimated the age of the person from his external appearance (mainly facial one).

In the Census education campaign (see Volume I, Introduction, sec. 3.3*e*) the problem of age assessment was given a prominent place. Through radio broadcasts, newspapers, mobile vans and rallies, people were advised to consult the family elders, the chiefs of villages, the literate persons (like teachers) and collect information that would enable them to estimate their ages. Teachers were instructed to determine the ages of the children and in this way to help work out the ages of their parents. But however ingenious or scientific the techniques for assessing ages are, there is, and indeed there can be, no guarantee in any Census that the procedures and rules laid down will be strictly adhered to in the field, however well-trained the enumerators are. It is quite likely that some enumerators might have resorted more frequently to the simple device of estimating the ages from respondents' physical characteristics or even by guessing than to the more laborious one of using historical events.

It is not yet possible to say how serious these errors were, but in view of the steps taken to guard against such occurrences, it seems reasonable to assume that the age statements, and age estimates are the nearest possible in the given circumstances, to the true ones. This is the only comment which can be made at this stage. It is hoped that at a later stage after the analysis and evaluation of the data a statistical measurement of the error involved would be obtained.

2.6 BIRTHPLACE: This refers to the actual locality where the person being enumerated was born. Enumerators' attention was drawn to the fact that some people might be inclined, wrongly, to regard their home-town or home-village where the family comes from, as being automatically their place of birth. The questionnaire provided for three mutually exclusive types of information on birthplace, each to be recorded in a different column:

a. Born in this town or village — This was marked for all persons who were born in the locality in which they were enumerated. The locality ought to have been defined as in the 1960 Census and not as at the time of birth.

b. Born in another town or village in Ghana — This referred to persons who were born in a locality different from the one in which they were enumerated. For such persons the enumerator had to specify the town or village and the region in which they were born. Here too, the definition of regional boundaries should have been the one existing at Census date. The specification of region was expected to be a difficult one because of many reasons, the main ones being the changes in boundaries of regions in past years and the occurrence of the same name of locality in more than one region. To assist the enumerator, a list of traditional areas formerly called "states" with the names of the paramount chiefs (customary heads of traditional areas), classified by the existing seven regions was given in the Enumerator's Manual. Many persons especially from rural areas could indicate the traditional area in which they were born or the name of its "present" paramount chief rather than the region.

c. Born outside Ghana — In respect of these persons the name of the country was required. Enumerators were instructed not to use names of broad geographic or political units like "African", "European", or "American" but to specify the exact country. In particular, the enumerator was cautioned against the use of terms like "French territory" or "French" which are often related to or used by an African from the neighbouring ex-French territories instead of the actual name of country like Ivory Coast, Dahomey, Upper Volta, etc. The names of countries used were those by which they were officially known at the time of the Census. The same names are preserved in this publication except for Sudan Republic which has been changed to Mali and Togoland to Togo. It should also be mentioned that under other West African countries have been included a number of persons of African origin who merely stated that their country of birth was French without any further specification as to which of the former French territories they referred.

2.7 COUNTRY OF ORIGIN: The country of origin was defined as the country where the person's father was born, in all cases where this was a foreign country. If the father was born in Ghana then the country of origin would be determined by the country of birth of the father's father. If the country of birth of the male parent was not known (including also cases where in matrilineal societies the mother's origin is more emphasized), the country of origin was determined by the country of birth of the person's mother or mother's mother.

The Enumerator's Manual instructed how this question should be asked and emphasized the difference between the country of birth of a person (as defined under 2.6) and the country of origin in order to ensure, as far as possible, an accurate definition. Also the method of determining the country of origin based on an unambiguous physical fact of birth of parents or of grandparents aimed at the same goal — to avoid arbitrary and variable interpretations based on feelings of allegiance or other non-factual considerations. The definition adopted had to serve the main aims of demographic analysis and not administrative and legal ones. For example, the relationship between country of origin and country of birth (see tables in Part Two) was intended to evaluate the impact of immigration on population growth as reflected by the number of persons of foreign origin born abroad and born in Ghana. For the same reasons and also in order not to leave any doubts in the minds of persons of foreign descent as to the scientific intentions of the Census planners, the two alternative questions proposed by some members of the Advisory Committee on the Census questionnaire viz.—nationality or citizenship, were excluded.

At this stage one cannot evaluate the accuracy of the information obtained, i.e. one cannot judge to what extent the figures given on the number of persons of foreign origin are accurate. The figures obtained are quite relevant even if they were somewhat underestimated.

2.8 SCHOOL ATTENDANCE AND LEVEL OF EDUCATION: The Census questionnaire provided three separate questions, the first one referring to school attendance and the other two to level of education:

a. Whether attending school now, in the past or never.

b. Type of school attended.

c. Highest standard or grade attained ('b' and 'c' had to be answered for persons whose reply to question 'a' was now or in the past).

The questions were asked only of persons aged six years and over. Children under six years of age who were attending a school were excluded for several reasons: their number was estimated to be small; in many cases enumerators used the fact of school attendance as an indication that the child was aged six years or more and estimated the age according to the grade attained; children under six years of age are more likely to attend kindergartens, nurseries and similar institutions and they might be confused with regular school attendants.

Information was sought only about regular school attendance. In the Enumerator's Manual it was explained that "a person is regarded as receiving or having received full-time education if he or she is attending or has attended a regular primary, middle, secondary, university or some other similar type of school where he or she spends or has spent at least four hours a day in receiving general education and in which the emphasis was not on vocational or trade training". The definition embraced both governmental and private institutions, such as missionary schools, "permitted" schools and Arabic schools, but excluded private tuition, correspondence courses, night schools and trade schools such as Workers' (formerly Builders') Brigade and motor schools. In cases where the enumerator was in doubt as to whether a given institution fell within the definition or not, he was instructed to enter the name of that institution to make it possible for the Census Office to decide upon the classification.

The emphasis on regular schools is in accordance with the recommendations of the United Nations (Handbook of Population Census Methods, Volume III, page 31) and suited well the intentions of the Census Office to ensure a clear definition of the concept and an unambiguous meaning of the statistics obtained. By eliminating from these statistics persons who have benefited from private tuition, vocational training, etc., we do exclude a part of the population which received some general education too. However, their number (e.g. private tuition) is not large and some of these statistics can be obtained from other sources. The main advantage in the adoption of the above limitation is to avoid inflation of education statistics by excluding types of tuition and vocational training the curriculum of which varies widely and is not well known and can hardly be compared with the regular educational system.

It should also be noted that the definition of regular school attendance is not identical with that of literacy, a subject which was not enquired about in the main Census (but only in the Post Enumeration Survey).

The level of education is reflected by the type of school and grade attained or the number of years of attendance in the past or at present (by those who were attending school at the time of the Census). The question on grade attained (used in the sense of attended and not necessarily completed) is a departure from the United Nations recommendations. It does not distinguish between those who only " attained " a given grade, and those who actually completed it. It is therefore a less accurate measure of the level of education of the past school attendants. (In the case of present school attendants the grade completed would be one less than that indicated in the tables.) There were two reasons for this change. Firstly it was considered that for those who were attending school at the time of the Census the question on the grade they were in would give a more accurate information than the question on grade completed; this latter might have been confused with the former, thus varying from one enumerator to another and, in general, resulting in an overestimate of the grades of the " present " school attendants. Secondly, the use of a different term (namely " completed " instead of " attained ") for the past school attendants only, was excluded for the sake of uniformity and simplicity.

It should also be mentioned that in respect of universities and teacher training colleges the number of years attended generally indicates also the grade; in the case of commercial and technical schools this is true only in those " approved " by Government which constitute about one-third of the total. There are a few exceptions to this however which must be borne in mind. Though a university course usually lasts 3 years for students who have reached or passed the intermediate level, students who have not quite reached this standard usually do one or two years pre-intermediate courses before they are admitted to the 3-year courses; for such students, the number of years completed will not necessarily correspond to the grade attained. Again, owing to differences in the years of study the number of years spent in an institution may not indicate unambiguously the grade. For example, in the first ten years of the existence of the University College of Ghana (now University of Ghana) general degree students obtained their degrees after two years (post intermediate) of study while their honours degree counterparts spent three years for their degrees. Variations also occurred when students spent one or two years on one course and changed over to another without completing the first. In such cases the number of years spent in the University may not necessarily indicate the grade attained. A similar situation exists in respect of teacher-training colleges. Whereas some teachers spent four years after their middle education to qualify for a Teachers' Certificate 'A', those who have completed their secondary education, spend only two years to qualify for this certificate. In such cases the years completed will not correspond to the grade attained since the post-secondary students are obviously of a higher calibre than the post-middle students. A complication here was that the information was not uniformly entered. In certain cases where an indication was given that the type of school was teacher-training (post-sec.), the appropriate code box for 6 years or more (i.e. secondary 5 years plus 2 years teacher-training) was crossed so that such teachers would be classified in the group teacher-training—4 years or more. In general however, the entries on the questionnaires merely stated 'teacher-training 2 years' without specification as to whether it was post-secondary or not. Other complications arise from the fact that the length of time spent to obtain the same qualifications may vary periodically. In Arabic schools, the year of attendance indicated should be taken rather literally, with little or no relationship to grading.

It should also be mentioned that in a few cases, the answers received in respect of grade attained presently seemed to be inconsistent with the persons' declared age, e.g. a person aged seven who is recorded as being in middle class two or a person aged twenty-one who is recorded as being in primary class one.

By determining the minimum ages which would correspond to a given grade or class, such errors were corrected by adjusting the grade to agree with the declared age. Such corrections (i.e. editing) were however kept to a minimum and so a few apparent inconsistencies may still be found in the Census tables.

NOTES

(i) This map shows the boundaries of the 69 Local Authorities of Ghana on Census Night, March 20th, 1960. The boundaries were plotted by Geographical Teams of the Census Office (from information collected from the Local Authorities) for statistical purposes only and have no legal or administrative authority.

(ii) For each Region indicated on this map, a separate map showing the Census Enumeration Areas is published on the scale of 1:250,000 (approx. ¼ inch to the mile). These Regional maps should be used in conjunction with Volumes I and II of the Census Tables.

(iii) Two additional Regions have been created since the Census: CENTRAL REGION comprising the following ten Local Authorities: 04, 05, 06, 07, 08, 09, 10, 11, 12 and 13; and UPPER REGION comprising seven Local Authorities: 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92 and 93.

Information supplied by the Geographical Section of the Office of the 1960 Population Census of Ghana under the direction of Dr. J.M. Hunter of the Geography Department of the University of Ghana.

Drawn and photo-lithographed by Survey of Ghana, Accra. 1961.
